

RECEPTION TO HOOVER WILL COVER 2 DAYS

Plans Completed for Affair Centered About Republican Nominee

MANY DELEGATIONS

Interviews and Discussions of Many Problems Will Take Much Time

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Aug. 15—(INS)—Plans were completed here today for the reception of Herbert Hoover, Republican nominee for president, next Wednesday and Thursday when thirty thousand people are expected. The major part of the nominee's time will be devoted to receiving farm delegations and discussing their problems.

On Tuesday, shortly after his arrival, Mr. Hoover will receive a delegation of Iowa farmers and give them an hour and a half to present their side of the troublesome question. On Thursday morning he will receive farm delegations from Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee, and on that afternoon he will give an hour and a half to farm delegations from Missouri, Nebraska, Minnesota, Oklahoma, the Dakotas and Kansas.

These delegations are to be chosen at farm meetings to be held here the morning of the interviews. Harrison E. Spangler, chairman of the local entertainment committee, who has just returned from Chicago where he was in conference with James W. Good, of the Western headquarters, says Mr. Hoover is anxious to meet the farm representatives and go over with them the problems they want solved.

Hoover is giving an hour and a half to each farm organization with the hope each will be able to inform him just what is wanted. He will give a half hour to labor representatives on the same day.

Mr. Hoover also has consented to head an industrial aid agricultural parade on August 23, which promises to be the biggest event in the recent history of Iowa. Thirty thousand people are expected to take part in it. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover, on August 22nd will review a parade of 10,000 boys and girls from this state, Illinois and Nebraska. These are the only public appearance he will make here.

State News

HARRISBURG, Aug. 15—(INS)—Studies completed by experts in the Department of Forests and Waters have convinced officials that it is useless to attempt reforestation in areas bathed with industrial fumes except with a few species able to withstand the unnatural conditions.

The Department today made public a list of trees naming those found best able to withstand industrial smoke and fumes. With the exception of elderberry bushes the ailanthus was found to thrive best under such conditions. Three varieties of oak—white, pin and red—in the order named also were found able to withstand the smoke. Norway maple came next on the list followed by oriental pine, black locust, elm, tulip poplar and the silver, sugar and ash leaved maples.

The Savian juniper was found to be the best condifer for the conditions. Austrian pine, arbor vitae and red cedar also grew in the localities in which studies were made.

It was recommended that in planting the approved species, well rooted, thrifty, nursery grown stock be used. Trees about one inch in diameter at breast height were suggested.

In studying localities whose industries throw off large amounts of smoke and fumes acute injury to tree growth was found as much as ten or fifteen miles from the plants. If the topography and prevailing winds are suitable instances were found from 50 to 100 miles where trees had been stunted by gas and smoke carried in the atmosphere.

Scouts at "Bucco" Enjoy Selections by Musical Corps From Doylestown

ADVANCEMENTS MADE

Among the Bucks County organizations visiting camp last week was the Morrisville Rotary Club with 90 per cent of its members present, and the Doylestown American Legion Post Bugle and Drum Corps.

The corps rendered many stirring selections which brought forth peals of applause from the campers and Rotarians with the request for repeating several of the selections. Organizations visiting camp received a very cordial welcome, and it is the desire of the camp committee that in the program of the various service clubs, Legion Posts, and lodges that they schedule on their 1929 program a visit to Bucco.

Once each week is "stunt night" at which time the Scouts of each tent present an original stunt before the campfire. Among the scenes of unusual interest was the "swimming instructor's class" with a take-off of Mr. Gemmill, the Red Cross swimming instructor. Another was a western rescue of a fair damsel in distress and although the steeds were lacking, the riders were able to demonstrate their riding ability. The swimming period was dramatically demonstrated with many buckets of water. "The Shaving of Bugler Joe" was awarded many rounds of applause owing to the bewhiskered condition of Camp Bugler Joe. Everyone enjoyed the splashing of "Doc" who had received a wetting in the morning without being able to find out who was the guilty party. Among the many things that the campfire visitors enjoyed, the one receiving the most recognition, was the Indian dancing by "Bob" Huttonlock, the Indian instructor, accompanied by junior assistant scout leader, Mahlon Detweller, of Perkasie No. 1, who played the Tom-Tom.

Advancements for the week showed a continued increase with the following:

Second class camp advancement: Lanshorne No. 1—Duncan Brown, Edward Brown and Vincent Mather; Doylestown No. 1—Walter Beck, Thomas Bradshaw, Ralph Hamilton, Charles Reimer, George Ross, Richard Somers and Earl Wray; Doylestown No. 2—Harry Traeger.

Leslie Treude, of Elizabeth, N. J., has returned to his home from a week's visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis M. Treude, of 1409 Pond street.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Lovett, of Madison street, were guests during last week of relatives in Morrisville, Pa.

State News

MILL VILLAGE, Pa., Aug. 15—(INS)—A conscience-stricken Jean Valjean, evidently believing that it is better to do squares things in the sight of justice, decided that a dahlia for a typewriter, a dahlia for an adding machine, and a dahlia for the pennies he got out of the cash register would square his accounts.

"The Dahlia Man" entered the office of C. Mitchell and Sons here, "cleaned up" as much as he could, and then added that bit of the feminine touch by placing dahlias here and there in the office, and, of course, on the boss's desk.

In exchange for the flowers, "the Dahlia Man" packed away a typewriter, an adding machine, and a few pennies out of the cash register. But C. Mitchell and Sons did not consider it a fair exchange and police are now looking for the man with the dahlias.

FRANCE RECOGNIZES THE DEBT

The proposal that European debtors trade some of their colonies to the United States for the cancellation of their war debts has been made several times by Europeans, but it has received no official consideration so far as the public knows.

A former French consul-general at New York is the latest to make the suggestion. He asks why the United States and France do not settle the ticklish question of French war debts, which already has aroused so much ill feeling and is likely to cause more, by having the French cede certain of their colonies to the United States in return for cancellation of a part or all of France's debt.

America insists that the war debts be paid, but she wants them paid in gold, not in unwilling subjects. This nation is not in the market for additional territory. It now has more than it knows what to do with. Experience has taught the American people that cancellation of the French debt might prove cheaper than assuming some of her troublesome colonial obligations.

From every angle the proposal would be a bad deal for the United States. It would mean a liability crowning a liability; a compounding of a debt.

The offer is, in one respect, not distasteful to Americans. It reflects a happy change in France's debt policy. A few months ago she was demanding cancellation and offering nothing but insults in exchange. Today she is willing to pay her debt with land. At last she admits it is an honest debt. That in itself will restore friendly feelings between the two peoples, because the United States is exercising the greatest charity and patience toward her debtors.

THE PATHFINDER

No man liveth unto himself alone. Newton, the scientist said, "If I have achieved anything in science it is because I have stood on the shoulders of giants."

The young student takes it as a matter of course that he shall follow the old masters. If music, he sits at the feet of great guides—Bach, Beethoven, Chopin. If art, he works for hours before copies of the great masters—Raphael, Michael-Angelo, Murillo. The student not only knows the value of the pathfinder, but is happy to acknowledge the debt he owes these immortals.

So it is in business. The man who forges to the front in industrial or commercial life is the man who is closely in touch with everything the leaders in his line are doing. Business men are not ashamed to follow the pathfinder.

The greater the man, the more frankly does he acknowledge his debt to men still greater than himself. Plato sat at the feet of Socrates, Aristotle at the feet of Plato. Raphael learned his art from Angelo, and Corregio from Raphael.

None but a fool feels himself to be self-sufficient. The best of men must acknowledge their masters. Few there are in the galaxy of world stars that shine by themselves without the added luster of borrowed glory.

It is not weakness to have a pathfinder, but rather a mark of good sense.

The times are comforting to a nobody. He can visit the beach and observe how funny great men look in bathing suits.

"Sorry, Professor, but you see I'm no better than the rest of you, after all." Daniels was leaning forward, supporting himself with his hands, bearing heavily down on the table. "You might as well hear this out," he turned to Cowles.

"Exactly," Daniels agreed. "He was to get half of the two hundred thousand dollars that I had told him would be in the bag. As you know, it wasn't there, but my shortage was covered. And then, today, he sent for me. I was afraid—I didn't know why—conscience-stricken, I guess. And I was worried. I didn't care what happened. I wanted to be out of the whole mess."

Daniels' head dropped. He fell sprawling across the table.

The bluecoat sprang forward and caught him by either arm. They shook him violently. Cowles moved over and turned the man about, pulling back the spring overcoat, the coat and vest. A deep dark stain spread slowly over the front of his shirt. The detective bent his head and rested it on the man's chest.

"He's dead!" He rose to a standing position and looked about the room. "Well, I guess this about settles matters," he decided. "One of you boys had better bring up the wagon."

"Oh, please, please, Mr. Cowles. Don't take me back there. Please, don't."

Rose ran forward, catching the man's coat lapels, shaking him in her frenzy of fear. "Don't you see now," she sobbed. "It's just like I told you? I didn't have nothing to do with it. And neither did Chuck."

Cowles looked at the girl. Her story held water. He felt sorry for the poor kid. She had just got herself mixed up with the gang without knowing what she was doing. But he had promised Cassidy that he wouldn't let her out of his sight.

"Well, I'll tell you what I'll do, girlie," he promised. "I'll see that you get a square deal, and the boy, too."

"Say, he was in on it as much as we was," Lefty interrupted, straining at his bonds.

"He was not," the Sparrow looked up from the floor, where he had slowly risen to a sitting posture. "He didn't know nuttin' about it. Wasn't he knocked out cold all th' time? Didn't th' goil say so?"

"You ear, you!" The Professor snarled. "You know he helped to plan this stickup."

"Nut'in' of th' sort," the Sparrow insisted. "Youse planned it yerself. We was only in on it because we was slated for th' doity work. Chuck didn't have nut'n' to do wit' at. Hones, he didn't." He turned to Cowles with a pleading look in his eye. "Ah, jeez, cap, have a heart. Th' kid don't know nut'in' about it. Sure, he was in on it, but give 'im a break. He's tryin' ta go straight—him an' th' June. He come here ta tell th' Professor at."

"Well, that's all right, but I'll have to take 'em down to the sergeant just the same," Cowles argued.

The clatter and rattle of the wagon as it rolled up in front of the door brought them all to attention.

The two detectives and the policeman herded their captives out the door and into the Black Maria.

As Sparrow passed, Chuck grasped his hand and pressed it silently.

Sergeant Cassidy looked up from his desk at the boy and girl who stood in front of him.

"Damn you, shut up!" The Professor suddenly broke out in a tirade of curses.

"That's all right, Heminway, we've been on to your game for some little time," Cowles assured him. "We've only been waiting to catch you red-handed and now we've got you just about where we want you." Go on, Daniels."

"Well, as I was telling you, I heard this place mentioned, and suddenly a thought came into my mind. Suppose I should make a deal with a gang of crooks. I could arrange for a hold-up very easily. I had charge of the receipts at the bank, all I would have to do would be to substitute a lot of junk that would look like the real thing."

"And so it was you," the Professor exclaimed, a wry smile on his lips. "You took that money!"

"I had taken it," Daniels corrected him. "The shortage would have appeared on my books. What was easier than to make it seem that the satchel which went into the armored car had been stolen?"

"Well, Mr. Daniels," Cowles began, "so you substituted all that paper and stuff, and pretended it was the real money. It would have fixed up your shortage pretty nicely, wouldn't it? Suppose you tell us what happened after you left the saloon."

"Well, as I told you, I heard these men talking about this fence, as they called it. I came here, talked to this man," he pointed towards Heminway, "and offered to split with him, not telling him, of course, that there would be no money in the saloon."

"You needn't worry about us," Heminway said. "We're going right up to some little church, maybe the one around the corner, an' after that we're going to take up farming. How about it, Rose?"

NOTICE

Vacant lots, spaces along gutters, and numerous properties in Bristol, are in many instances covered with weeds and undergrowth.

This condition not only makes our town unsightly, but is a menace to the health of the community and makes the Borough very unsightly.

Weeds at this season of the year are seeding and the seeds are carried by the wind onto adjacent property and become planted in well kept lawns, ruining the grass.

The powers of the Street and Highway Committee, the Public Works Committee and the Police Committee will be exercised to correct these conditions.

STREET COMMITTEE,
Bristol Borough Council.

The congregation was originally started with 200 members, and at the present time has a large non-resident membership, almost fifty per cent coming from outside of Doylestown. The church building was started in October, 1864, and dedicated in 1865. The first pastor was Rev. Yearich, who continued until 1868 when he was succeeded by W. H. Hartman, who resigned in the fall. Rev. Lewis C. Sheep was called and began his pastorate December 1, 1868, remaining until his death. A new church was built in 1897.

The seventh church was St. Paul's Lutheran Church, founded in 1890. The congregation first worshipped in St. Paul's Episcopal Church and then in Beneficial Hall. A building was partially erected in 1867 and dedicated on March 4, 1877. English and German were both preached at first and up until 1890, after which time all services have been in English. This church, at first had a hard struggle, it was explained, but in recent years has enjoyed prosperity and will in the near future erect a new edifice on North Main and Broad streets.

The eighth church started was the First Baptist Church, in 1867. An attempt to organize a Baptist congregation here was made as early as 1846 but it failed. The first pastor was W. S. Wood. After the church was once organized through the efforts of New Britain Baptists, the congregation grew continually and it prospered until it now has a very active membership and a valuable church property. Just recently $15,000 was expended on the church.

Doylestown last church to be organized was the Second Baptist Church, a colored congregation. This was started in January, 1901. Four years before that a colored church in Doylestown was destroyed by fire. This church, Kiwanian Cogan declared, has a place in the community and should be fostered and helped.

Kiwanian Cogan placed his own valuations on the church properties of Doylestown as follows: Presbyterian, $125,000; Friends Meeting, $10,000; Methodist Church, $50,000; St. Paul's Episcopal, $50,000; Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, $70,000; St.

A Section Devoted to the Interest of the Home Builder and Home Maker

A BRICK COLONIAL

(By R. C. Hunter & Bro., Architects, New York)

Every part of the house illustrated herewith is lasting, substantial, dignified. It is conservative in line and style, adhering to the best Colonial tradition, yet charming and characteristic in its simplicity.

Constructed of brick, it is economical as well as lasting, as there is no perpetual upkeep with a brick house, as with a painted one, only the white trimmings of this Colonial house will need attention. A slate roof eliminates any additional expense on the roof score for years to come. The white shutters and blinds form a delightful contrast to the red brick, and the white doorway with its sidelights and paneling is Colonial in every detail.

A square formal reception hall is the center of the first floor and from this hall the simple stairway leads to the side floor. A very generous living room on one side of the reception hall, has an open fireplace by which one can sit in the long winter evenings. A living porch large and cheerful is found beyond the living room, reached by French doors on either side of the fireplace. A good sized dining room, an exceptionally well equipped pantry and a kitchen with its proper appointments, together with a generous open side porch complete the first floor.

On the second floor one finds four bed rooms, one very large and three slightly smaller, and two tiled bath rooms. All rooms have ample closet space.

Space is provided on the third floor for servants and storage and the cellar contains the laundry, furnace and coal bin, etc.

This house should have a lot with a frontage of not less than 80 feet.

Cost, about $12,800.

Complete working plans and specifications for this house may be obtained for a nominal sum from the Building Editor. Refer to House H-A-104.
